

THE HARVARD REVIEW OF PHILOSOPHY

Peter Unger

On 'Scientiphicalism' and the place of metaphysics

46

W. V. Quine

Dagfinn Føllesdal remembers his mentor and friend

106

The cover photo is a detail from a working drawing of the elevator and staircase for the house that Paul Engelmann and Ludwig Wittgenstein built for Wittgenstein's sister in Vienna. The freestanding, four-story staircase, which circled the glass-enclosed elevator shaft, was Engelmann's realization of an idea proposed by Wittgenstein.

VOLUME IX • SPRING 2001

LETTERS

On Hilary Putnam's Farewell Lecture 4
John Searle, Hilary Putnam

WITTGENSTEIN

Wittgenstein: Concepts or Conceptions? 7
By Gordon Baker

Saying and Showing and the Continuity of Wittgenstein's Thought 24
By Marie McGinn

Heidegger, Wittgenstein, and Skepticism 37
By Edward Minar

INTERVIEW

Peter Unger: 46
Science and the Possibility of Philosophy

ON PHILOSOPHY

Philosophy Between Naturalism 57
and Humanism
By Frederick Olafson

KANT

Kant's Deconstruction of the Principle of Sufficient Reason 67
By Béatrice Longuenesse

KUHN

On Wanting to Say, "All We Need Is a Paradigm." 88
By Rupert Read

QUINE

W. V. Quine Remembered 106
By Dagfinn Føllesdal

In the interview that Alexander Nehamas contributed to last year's issue of the Review (Volume VIII), we misspelled Professor Nehamas's surname several times. We sincerely apologize for our error.