

Table of Contents

PREFACE .....	17
---------------	----

Part One: The Method of Transcendental Phenomenological Reductions

INTRODUCTION: “ Wir wollen auf den ‘Sachen selbst’ zurückgehen ” .....	29
---	----

§1. The Literary Background of Husserl’s Phenomenology .....	29
§2. The Will to Philosophical Theory .....	32
§3. Phenomenology and Epistemology; Logic and Psychology ...	37
§4. Knowing, Ostensible Knowing, and the “Idea of Phenomenology” .....	43

CHAPTER ONE: The Transcendental Phenomenological Reductions .....	51
--	----

§5. Transcendental Phenomenology Defined .....	51
§6. Phenomenological Epochē and Reductions .....	56
§7. The Phenomenological Themmatization of Mental Processes. The Correct Order of Phenomenological Reductions .....	60
§7a. Historical Note on the Correct Order of Phenomenological Epochēs and Reductions .....	67
§8. The Positing and Acceptance Belonging to the Natural Attitude .....	70
§9. The Question of Motives for Self-Conscious Exercise of the Transcendental Phenomenological Epochē .....	73
§9a. The Existential Conditions for Exercise of Phenomenological Epochē. The Novelty of Husserlian Phenomenology .....	82

§10. Transcendental Intentionality. Classification of Transcendental Mental Processes . . . . .	85
§11. Actionality and Passivity. The Phenomenological Datum . . . . .	91
§12. Preliminary Formulation of Two Transcendental Phenomenological Laws. “Oriented Constitution” of Transcendental Phenomenological Mental Processes . . . . .	93
§13. Genetic and Static Transcendental Phenomenology. . . . .	97
§13a. Intuition, Experience, and Evidence . . . . .	100
§13b. Evidence and Experience. . . . .	105

CHAPTER TWO: *Specific Transcendental Phenomenological
Procedures* . . . . . 109

§14. “Unbuilding” and “Building-Up” Procedures of the Transcendental Phenomenological Epochē and Reduction . . . . .	109
§15. The Context and Motive for the Introduction of the Concept of “Oriented Constitution” . . . . .	112
§16. The Phenomenological Problem and Pseudoparadox of Reduction to the Sphere of the Transcendental Ego’s Ownness . . . . .	114
§17. The First Step of Unbuilding the General Positing in the Natural Attitude of the Real, Objective World . . . . .	118
§18. The Phenomenological Residuum of the First Step of Unbuilding . . . . .	122
§19. Schutz’s Critique of Husserl’s Fifth Cartesian Meditation . . . . .	124
§20. Sketch of the Constituting of the Primordial Quasi-objective Real World . . . . .	129
§21. Concluding Remarks about the First Step of Transcendental Unbuilding of the Real, Objective World . . . . .	132

CHAPTER THREE: *Further Transcendental Phenomenological
Procedures* . . . . . 137

§22. The Second Step of Unbuilding the General Positing in the Natural Attitude of the Real, Objective World . . . . .	137
---	-----

§23. The Phenomenological Residuum of the Second Step of Unbuilding. . . . .	140
§24. Possible Further Steps in Unbuilding Not Carried Out by Husserl. The Question of the Essential Limits of Unbuilding Reductions and the Reformulation of “Oriented Constitution” . . . . .	142
§25. First Critical Reflection: “Hyletic Data” . . . . .	146
§26. Terminological Note. . . . .	155
§27. Second Critical Reflection: Kinaesthetic Data . . . . .	156
§28. Third Critical Reflection: The “Setting of Kinaesthesia at Zero” . . . . .	160
§29. Concluding Critical Note. . . . .	164

CHAPTER FOUR: The Order of Transcendental Phenomenological Inquiry That Wills to Return to the “Things Themselves” . . . . . 169

§30. Method and Science . . . . .	169
§31. The Right Order of Scientific, Eidetic Inquiry . . . . .	172
§32. Three Topics of Inquiry . . . . .	176
§33. Ideation . . . . .	178
§33a. Skepticism, Empiricism, Idealism. . . . .	181
§33b. Essence, Concept, and Fiction. The Reasons for Phenomenology . . . . .	188
§34. Space, Time, Other . . . . .	194
§35. Conclusion to Part One: Interpretational Problems . . . . .	197
§35a. Note on the Meaning of the Term, “Method.” Supplementary Note on Ideation . . . . .	204

Part Two:

Transcendental Phenomenology of Oriented Constituting of Prespace and of Quasi-objective Space and Time

INTRODUCTION: The Problem, Plan, and Historical Setting of the Constituting of Space and Time . . . . . 211

§36. The Problem and Plan of Investigation of the Constituting of Space . . . . .	211
---	-----

§37.	The Focus and Argument of a Transcendental Phenomenology of Space . . . . .	215
§38.	The Historical Setting of the Investigation of Space Constitution. The Two Principal Lines of Thought about Space in Modern Science and Philosophy. . . . .	218
§39.	The Decisive Shift in the Problem of Space. Space, an Abstraction. . . . .	223
§39a.	Four Answers to the “Freeing of Space” . . . . .	226
§40.	Kant and the “Intuition” of Space . . . . .	227
§41.	The Clue to the Phenomenological Problem of Space in Its Historical Setting . . . . .	230

CHAPTER FIVE: Transcendental Phenomenological Unbuilding to the Tactually, Visually, and Auditorily Presented in Prespace . . . 237

§42.	The Point of Departure for Transcendental Phenomenological Unbuilding to the Tactually Presented in Prespace . . . . .	237
§43.	Prespatial Tactual Presentiveness . . . . .	241
§44.	Prespatial Tactual Sensum-Spreadoutness . . . . .	248
§45.	Transcendental Phenomenological Unbuilding to the Visually Presented in Prespace . . . . .	252
§46.	Prespatial Visual Presentiveness . . . . .	257
§47.	“Covering” and “Uncovering” as the Most Primitive Presentiveness of Visual Prespace . . . . .	263
§48.	The Visual Phenomenon of “Resistance.” Concluding Remarks . . . . .	267
§49.	Space and Sound . . . . .	269
§50.	Transcendental Phenomenological Unbuilding to the Quasi-objective Audible Phantom World . . . . .	271
§51.	Prespatial Auditory Presentiveness . . . . .	273
§52.	Concluding Remark . . . . .	276
§53.	Problems Attendant on Objectivating the Oriented Constituting of Tactual, Visual, and Auditory Prespaces . . . . .	277
§54.	Further on the Phenomenological Concept of “Kinaesthesia” . . . . .	284

CHAPTER SIX: Transcendental Phenomenological Building Up of Quasi-objective Space in Primary Passivity . . . . .	289
§55. The Point of Departure for Building-Up Analyses of Quasi-objective Space. . . . .	289
§56. A Tentative Classification of the “Data of Sensation” . . .	292
§57. The First Step of Building-Up Analysis of the Oriented Constituting of the Real, Objective World. The Constituting of “Here” . . . . .	296
§58. Further Reflections on the First Step of Building Up of the Real, Objective World . . . . .	300
§59. Prespaces and “Identicals” in Prespaces . . . . .	304
§60. Limiting Cases of Prespatial Constituting . . . . .	311
§60a. Methodological Consequences of Limiting Cases of Prespatial Constituting. Some Phenomenological Findings . . . . .	314
§61. Critical Reflections. . . . .	319
§61a. Further on the First Step of Building-Up Analysis and the Constituting of the Other ( Cartesian Meditations , §42) . . . . .	324
CHAPTER SEVEN: The Transcendental Phenomenological Building Up of Phantom Quasi-objective Space . . . . .	329
§62. The Temporal Form of Prespaces as Phenomenological Foundation of the Oriented Constituting of Quasi-objective Time and Space . . . . .	329
§63. Preliminary Explorations of Quasi-objective Space . . . .	334
§64. Some Phenomenological Characteristics of the Oriented Constituting of Quasi-objective Space . . . . .	337
§65. Oriented Constituting of the Quasi-objective “Core-World” . . . . .	343
§66. The Phenomenological Significance of the Foundedness of the Phantom Core-World . . . . .	347
§67. The Oriented Constituting of Here-Centered and Centerless Quasi-objective Space. Supplementations. The Phantom Locomotive in Quasi-objective, Here-Centered Space . . . . .	350

§68.	Quasi-objective Here and There of the Phantom Locomotive. Further Supplementations . . . . .	354
§68a.	Oriented Constituting of Quasi-objective Between and Depth. Differences in the Constituting of Quasi-objective Here-Centered and Centerless Space. Still Further Supple- mentations . . . . .	360
§69.	From Prespaces to Quasi-objective Centerless Space. . . . .	363

Part Three: Quasi-objective Primordial Space, Time, and Other and the Transcendental “Deduction” of Space and Time

INTRODUCTION: The Transcendental Phenomenological “Deduction” of Space (Time). . . . . .	369
---	-----

§70.	The Transcendental Phenomenological “Deduction” of Space . . . . .	369
§71.	Critical Reflection on the Transcendental Phenomenological Deduction of Space. The Transcendental Phenomenological Problem of Depth. . . . .	379
§72.	Reformulation of the Transcendental Phenomenological Deduction of Space as the Genesis of the “Idea of Space, Time, and Other” . . . . .	386

CHAPTER EIGHT: The Transcendental Phenomenological Building Up of Primordial Quasi-objective Space. The Founding Substratum of the Perception of Someone Else . . . . .	395
--	-----

§73.	“Space” and “Spaces” . . . . .	395
§74.	Some Apperceptual Motivations for the Oriented Constituting of Quasi-objective Primordial Space. “If-Then” Causality. . . . .	401
§74a.	“Causality” as Apperceptual Inference . . . . .	401
§74b.	The Twofold Meaning of Primary Passive “Causality.” Kant and Husserl . . . . .	406
§75.	Quasi-objective Primordial Appearances. Light and Solids . . . . .	408
§75a.	Some Specific Features of the Oriented Constituting of Quasi-objective Primordial Space. . . . .	412

§76. The Constituting of the Quasi-objective Primordial Animate Bodily Organism . . . . .	415
§77. The Transcendental Phenomenological Significance of Further Building-Up Analysis and the Place of the “Transcendental Deduction of Time” . . . . .	424
§78. Space and Other

CHAPTER NINE: The Constituting of Space and Other in the Primary Passivity of the Quasi-objective Primordial World. The Transcendental “Deduction” of (Space) Time. . . . . .	433
--	-----

§79. The Phenomenological Datum of the Second Stage of Building-Up Analysis: Presentational Immediacy and Immanence (a. The Basic Assumption; b. Presentational Immediacy; c. The Transcendental Phenomenological Datum) . . . . .	433
§80. Critical Reflection on the Right Transcendental Phenomenological Question of “Other Minds” . . . . .	436
§81. Identifying and Assimilative Syntheses Pertaining to Quasi-objective Primordial Intersubjective “Space Perception” . . . . .	439
§81a. Primordial Surrounding Space, World-Segments, Earth-Basis, and the Perception of Someone Else . . . . .	442
§81b. The Constituting of Body and Animate Bodily Organisms in Primordial Surrounding Space . . . . .	446
§82. The Setting for Further Building-Up Analysis of “Internal Time” . . . . .	449
§83. The Right Order of Analysis of “Internal Time.” The Modes of Temporal Orientation . . . . .	451
§84. “Time” and “Times.” The Transcendental Phenomenological “Deduction of Time” . . . . .	456
§85. The “Third Time” as the Sufficient “Condition” for the Mundanization of Transcendental Mental Living in the Natural Attitude. The Contemporaneity of Time . . . . .	460
§86. Graphic Representation of the “Consciousness of Internal Time” . . . . .	464
§86a. The Graphic Representation of the Transcendental “Deduction” of Time. The Laws of Oriented Constituting . . . . .	471

Part Four: Time, Space, and Other: Problems in Transcendental Phenomenological Philosophy

Introduction: The Phenomenological Paradox of Mind and Nature. . . . . 477

- §87. The Phenomenological Themes of Time and Space in Their Historical Setting . . . . . 477
- §88. Eidetic Transcendental Phenomenological Problems of Space and Time . . . . . 481
- §89. Transcendental Mental Living as a Concrete Whole . . . 485
- §90. Critical Reflections on “Nature” and “Mind,” and the Phenomenological Paradox Lost . . . . . 492
- §91. Regional Linkages. The Phenomenological Paradox
Regained . . . . . 498
- §92. Irrreality and the Problem of Existence in Modern Philosophy . . . . . 503

CHAPTER TEN: Reality and “Irreality,” “Absolute Being” and “Real Being”. . . . . 509

- §93. The Problem of Existence in Husserl’s Critique of Brentano. . . . . 514
- §94. Brentano and Husserl . . . . .
- §95. The Transcendental Phenomenological Formulation of the Problem of Existence in Modern Philosophy. The World-
Paradox. . . . . 521
- §96. The Positing of Space, Time, and Other as Irreal
Actualities. “Real Being” and “Absolute Being” . . . . . 527
- §96a. Presentationality and Positionality. The Second
Phenomenological Theme: “My Own Transcendental
Mental Living Believing in Itself as Being in the World
Even If Nothing Else in the World Exists” . . . . . 533

CHAPTER ELEVEN: *The Limit-Phenomena of Transcendental
Phenomenology of Mental Living in the Natural Attitude.
Transcendental Aesthetics and Analytics of Space, Time, and Other* . . . 539

- §97. Transcendental Aesthetics and Analytics . . . . . 539
- §98. The First Limit-Phenomenon: Material and Formal
Universals. . . . . 545

§98a. Transcendental Phenomenological Aesthetics and Analytics Redefined . . . . .	551
§99. The Second Limit-Phenomenon: Experience of Someone Else. . . . .	552
§100. The Transcendental Phenomenology of the Real, Objective Social World. . . . .	557
§101. The Shared Phenomenological Premises of the Second Limit-Phenomenon. . . . .	558
§102. The Transcendental “Deduction” of the Other. . . . .	564
§103. The Unity of the We-Relationship . . . . .	565
§104. Phenomenological Results . . . . .	568
CHAPTER TWELVE: The Transcendental Phenomenological Community of the Real, Objective World in the Transcendental Natural Attitude . . . . .	579
§105. Two Phenomenological Findings About the Constituting of the Real, Objective World . . . . .	579
§106. Phenomenological Demonstrations. The First Stratum of a Transcendental Phenomenological Analytics . . . . .	584
§107. (Transcendental) Eidetic Phenomenological Judging of Judgments of Taste. . . . .	590
§108. Common Taste and Eidetic Intuition. . . . .	595
§109. Phenomenology and Phenomenological Philosophy. . . . .	601
Bibliography . . . . .	607
Index . . . . .	627
Index of Names . . . . .	635