
Contents

An interview with Simon Blackburn, 153

The origins of selves, 163

Daniel C. Dennett

Do I choose who I am?

Thomas Aquinas: an outline, 173

Brian Davies

Aquinas was one of the greatest philosophers, but his thinking went beyond philosophy

Logical positivism and ethics, 179

Jonathan Harrison

A once-popular philosophy met great difficulty in accounting for moral judgements

Playing God, 186

Ruth F. Chadwick

Do some medical decisions usurp divine prerogatives? How should we decide?

The devil's advocate, 193

Peter Millican

Theism is no more plausible than antitheism

Global citizenship, 208

Trudy Govier

World citizenship doesn't imply world government, and it may be more practical

In justice to animals, 217

Ray Racy

Man's moral relationship to other creatures is now being taken seriously in both theory and practice

A radical learning theory for education, 224

David Corson

A theory of knowledge has profound implications for educational methods

Why philosophy needs feminism, 231

Morwenna Griffiths

Is philosophy handicapped by its male bias?

Objective drawing: observations on an exercise, 237

Pat Panton

Drawing, it is claimed, is a form of thinking

Literature and philosophy at Middlesex Polytechnic, 245

Doreen Maitre

Preconditions of philosophy, 251

John Wilson

Philosophy not what it used to be, 252

Ted Waring

Three men in a muddle, 255

Martin Hollis

War between the hemispheres, 256

Jonathan Harrison

Book reviews, 259

Editor's booknotes and books received, 263

Letters, 266

Cogito conference report, 268

Philosophy news, 270

Title-page and contents, Volume 3, 271