Musings

The Hunger for Money
by Marjorie Kelly

What we call "greed" might better be understood as a hunger for money—a hunger that is healthy, and deserves to be fed. Let us embrace a philosophy of abundance.

Notebook

An alternative economic summit (and how you can participate) . . . investing opportunities . . . the first annual Award for Corporate Responsibility . . . helping drug abusers at work . . . plus summertime thoughts from John Muir.

A Corporate Architecture for the Human Spirit

Frank Lloyd Wright and the Johnson Wax Buildings
by Marjorie Kelly

Ethics and aesthetics go hand in hand at Johnson Wax, which with its 1936 Administration Building created an uplifting environment for workers, and an architectural masterpiece.

The End of the Boss

The Decline of Hierarchy
by Harlan Cleveland

In the information age, the power monopolies made possible by closely held knowledge have begun to erode. Strangely, both the monopolies and their victims have been slow to perceive the trend.

Personal Ethics

The Dilemma of Office Romance
as told to Barbara Toffler

When V.P. Tom Benjamin announced office romance was unacceptable in his division, he didn't anticipate the arrival of a dynamic woman consultant who would stir feelings in his own heart.

Bookend

Of Time, Work, and Leisure
by Sebastian de Grazia

The capacity to use leisure rightly, Aristotle asserts, is the basis of the free person's whole life. Peace and prosperity are dangerous in a land that doesn't know what to do with leisure.
