Musings

Preserving the Wild Places

by Marjorie Kelly

We need places where the child in us can run free. It's time to discard the Puritan notion that ethics is a matter of following the rules; sometimes it's a matter of breaking them.

4

Notebook

The gods we worship write their names on our faces . . . Three new publications for the socially responsible investor . . . Exemplary corporate practices . . . The secretarial caste system . . . Emerson on "Illusions" . . . and more.

6

Modern Madness

The Emotional Fallout of Success

by Douglas LaBier

A vague but gnawing dissatisfaction, feelings of emptiness or self-betrayal—these are a few of the symptoms of the "modern madness" that results from the drive for corporate success. The most successful are often the most severely afflicted.

9

Manager as Magician

The Ethics of Leveraged Buyouts

by Benjamin J. Stein

Through LBOs, managements routinely take large amounts of money away from a company's lawful owners, the stockholders—and they do it by means of stealth and cunning. Why have we allowed this to become a normal part of American finance?

13

Personal Ethics

The Way We Do Things Around Here

A profile of managerial morals. With no prescription for how managers ought to act, two Canadian researchers set out to discover how managers actually make ethical decisions in their daily lives. They discerned the beginnings of a managerial consensus.

16

Bookend

Toward a Theology of the Corporation

by Michael Novak

Notes on the corporation as family, the spiritual essence of money, the human spirit as the primary form of wealth, and the ethical foundations of commerce.
