PART ONE:
PHENOMENOLOGY ON SINGULARITY (HUSSERL)	33
I. THE PROBLEM AND ITS BACKGROUND	33
1. Reflective vs. descriptive phenomenology.....	34
2. The originality of being	35
3. Description vs. presumption	38
4. An ‘unfaithful’ hermeneutics	40
5. Hermeneutics and singularity.....	43
6. Defining singularity with Husserl.....	47
II. THE PRIMITIVE SENSE–DATA, OR NONCOMPOUNDED SINGULARS.....	53
1. Hyle: a problematic approach.....	53
2. The matter/form scheme and its limitations	54
A non–intentional hyle	54
An intentional hyle	58
Hyletic sensibility.....	61
3. Hyle and life	66
Hyle: between intentionality and non–intentionality	66
Hyle and objectivity.....	69
Hyle and reflection.....	71

4. Hyle: between pure presence and temporal difference.	75
An ec–static impression (M. Henry).	75
Against pure presence (J. Derrida)	77
5. The aporetic singularity of hyle.	85
Hyle: immanence, or difference?	85
The singularity of hyle	87

III. THE MANIFOLD–UNITARY SINGULARS, OR SINGULARITY AS PARTICULARITY 93

1 The singularity of the transcendental.	94
a. Transcendental/empirical individuation	94
Is the transcendental individuated?	94
The identity of the transcendental/mundane ego	96
Psychology and transcendental phenomenology	99
The phenomenological–psychological reduction	102
The transcendental eidos ego/the eidos transcendental ego	105
b. The habitual ego	108
Towards genetic phenomenology	108
The generic ego	110
c. The passive ego.	113
Primal and secondary passivity.	113
The anonymity of the ‘sleeping’ ego	116
2. The singularity of things.	119
a. Perceptual objects.	119
Perceptual horizons	119
Marginal and focal attention	121
b. Objects as synthetic unities	122
Identity–formations	122
Anticipation and interpretation	123
The telos of a thing–in–itself	124
c. The living body	128

The syntheses of the living body	128
Spatial orientation	128
d. The role of association in thing–constitution	130
The formation of associative unities	131
Becoming otherwise.	132
Particularity vs. singularity.	134

IV. THE PRE-PHENOMENAL: SINGULARITY AS UNIQUENESS 137

1. The anonymous pre-ego: time–constituting consciousness	137
An ego–less sleep	137
The three levels of temporal constitution	139
Triple intentionality	140
The ‘being–together’ and the ‘being–all–at–once’.	141
The horizontal and the transverse intentionality.	143
The singularity of the flow of flows.	146
The gift of the pre–phenomenal.	149
2. The world given as pre–given: the question of pre–phenomenal spatiality	153
A singular world.	153
a. The world of the natural attitude	154
The naturalistic vs. the personalistic attitude	154
The practical vs. the theoretical attitude.	157
b. The progressive Cartesian epoché: the world–‘annulment’	160
The ‘residuum’ of the reduction	160
The non–being of the world.	162
From real being to being–meant	164
The world–horizon	166
c. Towards a regressive phenomenology: the world given as pre–given	168

Genetic constitution	168
The life–world	169
Natural attitude	170
Eidetic reduction	171
Transcendental reduction	173
Passive genesis	174
d. The pre–phenomenal space	175
The pre–givenness of the world	175
The total–space	177
Singularity and the pre–phenomenal	177
Conclusion	178

PART TWO:

PHENOMENOLOGY OF SINGULARITY

(E. LEVINAS AND M. HENRY)	183
--	-----

V. LEVINAS ON THE SINGULARISING SINGULARITY

OF THE OTHER.	183
--------------------------------	-----

1. Singularity beyond Husserl	184
Singularity vs. syntheses of difference/identification	184
Phenomenology as a theory of being	187
Factuality: beyond theory and things themselves	191
2. Hypostasis: the singularity of the here	193
Escaping existence	193
The hypostatic existent	195
The decline of hypostasis	199
Singularity: Being/beings without ‘nomos’	203
3. Breaching totality	205
Totality and the other	206
The idea of infinity	207
A naked phenomenology	208
Creatio ex nihilo	211

‘Describing’ the other.	213
An economical singularity	214
Separation and welcoming: multiple singularities.	217
4. The trace of the pre–original	219
The origin and the pre–original	219
Anarchic subjectivity	221
Diachrony and the trace.	224
‘Saying’ the phenomenological reduction.	226
Assemblage and language	227
An otherwise than temporality.	228
A barbarous ‘logos’	230
The said of the pre–original	232
The ambiguity of Levinas’s saying.	234
Substituting singulars: ethics and election	236

VI. MICHEL HENRY ON THE SINGULAR

IPSEITY OF LIFE	241
1. Against Husserl: towards absolute singularity	241
The radical reduction of the visible.	241
Husserl’s misconception of singularity	245
Why is life singular?	250
2. The non–contextual singularity of life	253
a. On indifference	253
With Levinas: going beyond identity and difference.	253
Merleau–Ponty: the non–dualism of the visible and the invisible	256
A ‘good’ dialectic	257
A ‘chiasmatic’ invisible.	259
The monist reversibility of the chiasm	262
Surpassing difference through indifference.	265
b. Ec–stases of the invisible	268
A ‘phenomenology’ of the invisible	268

A barbarous invisible	271
The transcendent ego, or the son of the world	273
Henry's monism.	275
3. The non-synthetic life	276
The community with the other life.	277
Individuation vs. individuality	279
The inner temporality of life.	282
The immemorial memory of the 'I can':
original resistance.	283
The ipseity of a singular self/Self.	285
Life and life: is man not God himself?	286
Birth vs. creation	288
Multiple singularities	289
4. The giving of a singular life	293
Singularity: the gift of life	293
Deceitful gifts	294
The gift: possession and dispossession	296
The ethical 'counter-gift'	298
The giving: with, or without its giver	301
Phenomenology and Christianity.	303
CONCLUSION	304
The progress of the study	304
Results	309
Further considerations: between a singular in itself and a singular givenness.	313
